The Executive Centre offers flexible satellite office package to support business continuity plans in response to COVID-19 pandemic

In light of the increasing COVID-19 cases in Japan and its economic impact, The Executive Centre Japan supports corporate business continuity plans by providing flexible satellite office solutions.

Japan (5 June 2020) The coronavirus pandemic is having a growing impact on Japan's economy. Many businesses are slowing down and testing out business continuity plans to keep their operations running. Under the business continuity model, companies are looking to avoid long-term and cash intensive commitments. Therefore, having flexibility and diversity of workplace options have become a necessity in any portfolio. Of the Fortune 500 companies, upwards of 85% are considering flex to play a more dominant role within their portfolios.

The Executive Centre's flexible office package can provide fully customisable office solutions based on your business type, size of team and budget. This will mitigate business risks and contribute to a healthy cash-flow by rationalising portfolios and decreasing real estate related costs – all the whilst being in a bespoke flexible workspace.

“COVID-19 has changed the way we work, and teleworking has been established.” said The Executive Centre Japan's country director Hiroteru Nin. “For the prevention of virus spread and business continuity, corporates are looking for satellite offices, and TEC supports their needs by offering private office units with prominent security and full facility support services. As the health and safety of every Member/customer is of utmost importance to us, TEC has implemented precautionary measures such as temperature checks for all Centre visitors, and cleaning and sanitisation of facilities on a daily basis.”
